The issues about women in periodicals of the Volyn province

Periodicals are the main source of research on issues of women's education and views on this problem of the Volyn province in the press. Official periodicals had a secular and religious character then were depicted in the local press, which was in private property [1]. One of the problem under analysis is determine the significance the wide participation of women in political, cultural and social life in the 19th century. Level of attention to these problems can explain us the main issues of women's education in general. The research of the woman social status is an important side of this topic. In fact, the situation of a rich woman (noble woman, petty bourgeois) was qualitatively different from the one of peasant in the 19th century. Analyzing the press of Volyn we can find the rare occasions of printed articles considering women's problems, questions, self projects. Journalism was the work for men. The tradition of women's text materials was absent. Preferably, article about women studied mostly the aspects of education. A new theory appeared according to the main problem in the Russian Empire lied in the lack of education; the phrased "mother without education". The press raised a large issue on whether it was necessary to open more girls' schools. Classes on different subjects on the press pages described in details [2]. The press of Volyn province traditional one for were the whole Russian Empire style of presenting thoughts can be determined as a constantly concerns the canons of Orthodox Church (stronghold of the imperial regime). The religious aspect imposed additional "taboo" in consideration to the social activity of women – its presence or absence.
