II TEXT READING

Traveller Personality

Before you decide to become a traveller, you must first do some serious self-examination. You have to ask yourself, "Do I have the personality and mind-set to be a traveller?" To be a happy and successful traveller, you must have a sense of adventure, a willingness to adapt and not mind being the perpetual new kid on the block. Travellers must be able to adapt to new situations quickly. They must be able to walk into a new hospital and feel comfortable in their environment within a very short period. Travellers need to be able to socialize easily with strangers, since everyone will be a stranger at first.

If you are uncomfortable not knowing anyone in the room or feel frightened in unfamiliar situations, then travelling may not be right for you. If you are a person that likes to be the most knowledgeable person at work and likes to know the where and how and who of everything, you may find being a traveller uncomfortable and intimidating. However, if you feel at home with a group of strangers within a very short period of time, enjoy the sense of adventure of going to new places, look forward to going to a new city and are not easily intimidated or concerned by being in unfamiliar situations, then you may do well as a traveller.

Travel also means meeting people along the way you might not be totally in love with; whose ideas and attitudes may or may not align with your own. We all have different personalities in different situations. Or rather, we show different parts of our personalities to different people. Yet with a grain of salt, the different types of travellers spice up the overall experience.

The Avid Adventurer. This person is an extreme experience seeker and adrenalin junkie. They are the type who want to visit all 7 continents and have a very long bucket lists. They keep a worn and highlighted copy of "1000 places to visit before you die" and start their vacation planning from this check list. If two avid adventurers meet at a cocktail party it's best to stand back as there will be dueling "can you top this..." dialog to follow that will begin to sound like a script from an Indiana Jones movie. They enjoy spontaneity while travelling and leave many itinerary details to chance because they are so laid back about the journey. They will seek out the road less traveled, sleep under the stars and eat very strange foods just because they can.

The Travel Snobs. These folks are not really snobs, they just enjoy the finer things in life. They really enjoy the art of travel; they just don't like extremes. They enjoy travelling to foreign destinations but they appreciate being surrounded by fine amenities. This is because they are experienced travellers with means of comparison. When visiting a destination they will want to see major historic sites, museums and the “must sees” of that particular place. Travel snobs tend to like itineraries that cover a great deal of ground in a short amount of time. Many have careers that require them to travel for work. They frequently travel alone and appreciate a good insider's tip. Travel snobs can easily navigate public transportation in foreign countries but would prefer to hire a driver. They will research and make reservations at the best restaurants in town. They tend to have more controlling or type A personalities. They enjoy the vacation planning process but do not need much hand holding away from home. They just do not like surprises.

The Typical Tourist. This is the largest majority of vacationers out there who are looking for a great value for their vacation dollars and the chance to build fun and exciting memories. Tourists are easy going folks looking for fun in all the right places. They are most influenced by their friends and the latest travel ads. If they visit Hawaii, they are happy to visit one island and return with hula skirt and a box of pineapples. To a tourist, this means they have “done” Hawaii. They've seen the highlights and now they are done. These are the same folks you see wearing the huge purple sombreros in customs after their flight home from Mexico. Tourists tend to like cruises, all inclusive resorts and theme parks. If they really love a particular destination they will return every few years but will probably want to stay at a different resort. They "say" that they want new travel experiences but chances are they will engage on the same type of activities year after year.

The Repeaters. These people live by the mantra “if it's not broken, don't fix it”. Repeaters take the exact same vacation, generally during the same week, year after year. This may partially be a matter of family tradition but generally these people are not big on taking risks. They hate surprises and find comfort in the same old things. They are loyal if not down right stubborn with their opinions. The repeaters are the ones you will find purchasing a time share. They tend to vacation not too very far from home. Generally they drive. They do not fly and do not have passports. These are the families that take their first child to Disney world in a stroller and return every year until all their kids graduate college. Repeaters tend to travel in packs or groups because they sense a certain safety in numbers.

The Home Bodies. Let's face it, there are a handful of folks that should just stay at home. They don't like to travel nor do they enjoy making vacation plans. They are travel pessimists and can give you a long list of reasons why not to travel. Their perfect idea of a week off from work is a staycation in the back yard. Often they have fears or phobias that will prevent them from leaving home. The only way they will go on vacation is with very strong encouragement, like an important family wedding. At best they can be decent travel companions as long as they do not need to plan or think about planning or the itinerary. Thinking about leaving home will consume them with stress. These folks find comfort in groups. They do best with group escorted tours where there is a tour leader to hold their hand every step of the way.

To make a long story short, success is found in compromise and communication. Trying to force someone into being a different type of traveller will only lead to arguments, frustrations and not a happy vacation for anyone.

Count the points and find out what your score means:

35-54 You spend so much time making sure that things don't go wrong that you hardly have time to enjoy yourself! Relax a little. You have to trust to luck sometimes, and it will give you more chance to have a good time.

19-34 Although you plan your schedule carefully, you don't spend sleepless nights worrying about things and it's a formula that seems to work. You obviously know that the unexpected can turn out to be the most fun.

0-18 You're the kind of person who does things on the spur of the moment. By leaving everything to the last minute, you often find yourself in a mess. Learn how to plan the basics and then you can relax and enjoy yourself.

3. Look at the picture and guess what type of a traveller your neighbour is. Prove your choice.

FRUGALTARIAN

Your backpack's stuffed with swiped breakfast buffet rolls, your radar for free Wi-Fi's off the scale and you're considering chancing the Metro today without a ticket. Again. Stingy? Nope, it's all just awesome common sense.

Bohemian Bob

You haven't looked back since buying a pair of harem pants from a real-live 'Buddhist monk' in a bar in Phnom Penh. Wherever there's a beach, you'll be there, fire poi-ing all over it.

NEGATIVE NANCY

Aw, is the food too spicy? The crowds too crowd-y? Better retreat your hostel, fire up the laptop and spend the rest of the evening playing Bejeweled Blitz on Facebook, then.

CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS

Every bit of knowledge about a new destination is fascinating, and you're the one to track it down. You just have one question: why aren't more people into the history of street signs in Venezuela?

BEACH BOPPER

Museums, castles, gallery visits... Naaaah, what is this, a school trip? You'll be on a lounge, slathered in Banana Boat oil, motioning for another Daiquiri and a back-rub por favor.

GERONIMO GILL

If there's a plane to hurl yourself out of, a bridge to jump off or a quad bike to be driven at a 45 degree angle along a mountain slope, you're there. You like to call it "travel insurance roulette," and you're feelin' lucky.

That's for sure.

You're absolutely right.

the Absolutely.

 That's exactly how I feel.
 Exactly.
 I'm afraid I agree with ...
 I have to side with ... on this one.
 No doubt about it.
 (agree with negative statement) Me neither.
 (weak) I suppose so / I guess so.
 You have a point there.
 I was just going to say that.
 I don't think so.
 (strong) No way.
 I'm afraid I disagree.
 (strong) I totally disagree.
 I beg to differ.
 (strong) I'd say the exact opposite.
 Not necessarily.
 That's not always true.
 That's not always the case.
 No, I'm not so sure about that.

5. Look at the pictures below. What types of traveller personality are they? What places do you think they have travelled to? What do you think their lives are like?

6. Imagine you are one of the people in the pictures. You meet Student A for the first time. He/she is very interested in your life and asks lots of questions. You are happy to talk about your life. Before you start, think of the following:

- your childhood/family background;
- how you ended up travelling;
- whether you enjoy your life or not;
- what kind of a person you are;
- your daily life;
- people you have met and experiences you have had.
